Computer hackers were able to steal $306,000 from the Crystal Lake Elementary School District 47 bank account by using a software virus called Clampi.

The school district has been reimbursed through its insurance policy since the June 29 report of a fund transfer discrepancy, but the investigation continues through the Federal Bureau of Investigations.

The FBI is also investigating several cases of reported online computer intrusions that have resulted in hundreds of thousands of dollars being stolen from at least two other Computer hackers were able to make transactions with the school's bank account by gaining access to passwords and login names, Shepard said.

The virus is a strain of malicious program.
